SEMINARY (July 7th)

Computer-Assisted Music Analysis - Dott. Michele Della Ventura

Admission free for subscribers to the course.

There are several ALGORYTHMES that segment a musical piece, and process a list of melodic segments that are located thanks to some formal rules, which respect musical analysis.

This article will present a melodic analysis pattern parsing in a progressive way the symbolic level of a musical text.

The least informative unit is the note, to which a statistical approach is applied, when spreading the analysis to wider melodic segments, considering the single information carried by each one.

The concept of information has been used for many years in the linguistic analysis and it has been applied to the musical language either.

This approach has been studied only focusing on the melodic field, avoiding concepts such as tonality, modulation and the rhythm particularly.

The effectiveness of this model has been tested through the analysis of several pieces from different musicians and different ages, trying to vary different composition techniques: from monody to polyphony to harmonic writing, where the main melody is almost hidden inside polyphony, approaching different composition styles through a unique analysis methodology
